

MEI Weekly.

Hours after Syria condemned Tel Aviv's incursion into its southern region and demanded a withdrawal, the IDF launched airstrikes on military bases and command centres in the area and near Damascus. Analysts say that these strikes are complicating the current Syrian administration's efforts to reunify the nation. Photo: AFP

WHAT'S NEWS: THE BIG HEADLINES THIS WEEK

Israel Strikes Syria After Nation's Leader Demands Withdrawal

"The presence of military assets and forces in the southern part of Syria constitutes a threat to Israeli citizens", the IDF said in a statement. Tel Aviv added that "any attempt" by Syrian forces or militant groups to establish a presence in the "security zone" will be "met with fire".

Iran Has Enough Highly Enriched Uranium for Six Nukes

Tehran is now producing enough fissile material in a month for one nuclear weapon, according to the report. Being at its most vulnerable position in years, Iran's strides come as the country indicated an openness to negotiating with the US on limits to its nuclear ambitions.

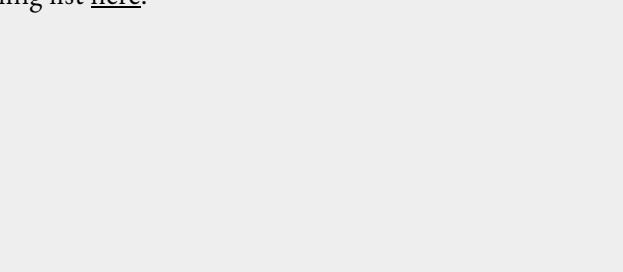

Iran has said it won't negotiate directly with Washington while under maximum pressure sanctions. Photo: AFP

LOOK AHEAD: WHAT TO KEEP A WATCH ON

White House Envoy Witkoff May Travel to Middle East

US Special Envoy to the Middle East Steve Witkoff could travel to the Middle East on Sunday if negotiations on the next stage of the Gaza ceasefire deal between Israel and Hamas go well, reports stated. He also told an American Jewish Congress that an Israeli delegation will travel to Doha or Cairo in the coming days to negotiate the next stage of the deal.

Mr Witkoff said Hamas cannot be part of any new government and "it is a red line for the Israelis". Photo: AFP
